OPINION OF THE COURT

AMBRO, Circuit Judge:

We consider whether, under the First Amendment, certain expenses incurred by unions may be charged to non-members and whether a local union must obtain independent auditor verification of its charges (and, if so, what kind of verification we require).

The First Amendment affords public-sector employees the freedom not to associate with a labor organization. See Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1 v. Hudson, 475 U.S. 292, 301 (1986) (quoting Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Educ., 431 U.S. 209, 222 (1977)). There are limits to this constitutional freedom, however, in light of organized labor's important role in advancing employment conditions. Abood, 431 U.S. at 225-26. Thus, as a means of curing the so-called "free-rider" problem posed by its representation of non-members, a union may charge each non-member employee a fair-share, or agency, fee equal to his or her per capita share of the union's expenses arising from its duties as a collective-bargaining representative. See id. at 235-36. But a union may not, consistent with the First Amendment, collect fair-share dues to support ideological causes or other expenses insufficiently related to collective bargaining. Id.

To ensure that non-members are assessed only for fair-share fees properly chargeable to them, the Supreme Court has ruled that unions must adopt procedural safeguards "carefully tailored to minimize the [First Amendment] infringement." Hudson, 475 U.S. at 303. First, the union must provide a non-member with "sufficient information to gauge the propriety of the union's fee." Id. at 306. This explanation of the basis for the fee is often referred to as a "Hudson notice." Second, a non-member must have an adequate opportunity to object to the fair-share fee allocation. See id. at 307. The two safeguards are linked; without the Hudson notice, a non-member would lack a basis for deciding whether to object to a fair-share fee calculation. Penrod v. NLRB, 203 F.3d 41, 46 (D.C. Cir. 2000).

When theory meets practice, questions abound. Do the financial information requirements apply to small local unions? How much verification of that information must there be? When a union represents more than one bargaining unit, can that union include, in the fair-share fee assessed to non-members of one bargaining unit, costs associated with another bargaining unit's litigation? What if those bargaining units are in different industries?

I. BACKGROUND AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Shaler Area Education Association ("SAEA") is the exclusive bargaining representative for education professionals employed by the Shaler Area School District. SAEA is the local affiliate of the Pennsylvania State Education Association ("PSEA") — which represents, inter alia, both education and healthcare professionals in the Commonwealth — and the National Education Association ("NEA," and collectively with SAEA and PSEA, the "Unions"). During the 1994-1995 school year, the Shaler Area School District employed 355 education professionals, 344 of whom were members of the SAEA (and, thereby, the PSEA and NEA). Because all three Unions provide collective-bargaining services to the plaintiffs' bargaining unit, the eleven non-members paid fair-share fees to the SAEA, PSEA, and NEA pursuant to 71 Pa. Cons. Stat. Ann. § 575 (West 2003).

Seven non-union education professionals brought this 42 U.S.C. § 1983¹ action to challenge the Unions' fair-share fee procedure and assessments.² After the District Court

1. 42 U.S.C. § 1983 states, in relevant part:

Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress

2. Six of the named plaintiffs are members of the SAEA-represented bargaining unit. The seventh, Marsha Otto, is a member of the confirmed that the plaintiffs had standing to object to the fair-share fees and the sufficiency of the Unions' Hudson notice,³ the parties filed a joint stipulation of facts followed by cross-motions for summary judgment. The District Court granted partial summary judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, declaring that the SAEA must verify its expenditures through an independent audit and that PSEA⁴ could not charge the plaintiffs for expenses incurred in litigation not relating specifically to the plaintiffs' own collective-bargaining unit. However, it also held that the Unions could assess education-professional plaintiffs for non-litigation expenditures related to the Unions' representation of healthcare professionals.

Both parties appealed, and together they present four issues for our review: (1) whether, by filing their complaint, plaintiffs objected properly to the Unions' fees and procedures; (2) whether a local union, regardless of size, must obtain an independent auditor verification of the expenditures listed in its fair-share calculation notice (and, if so, we need to decide at what level of auditor inquiry); (3) whether a union may charge non-members for collective-bargaining-related litigation costs incurred on behalf of another bargaining unit pursuant to an expense-pooling arrangement with that other bargaining unit; and (4) whether a union may charge non-members for pooled resources available to all local affiliates even though some of the affiliates represent employees in different professions. We rule in favor of plaintiffs as to issues one and two (and determine the level of verification required) and the Unions on issues three and four.

bargaining unit represented by the Grove City Area Education Association ("GCAEA"). While GCAEA was a defendant in the original complaint, it was dismissed from the action in plaintiffs' amended complaint.

3. However, the District Court held that, because the plaintiffs did not use the Unions' arbitration process, they lacked standing to challenge the timeliness of that process. Otto v. Pa. State Educ. Ass'n-NEA, 950 F. Supp. 649, 651-52 (M.D. Pa. 1997).

4. The District Court's order refers to PSEA and NEA, though it appears that the Unions argue in their briefing only as to PSEA.

II. JURISDICTION AND STANDARD OF REVIEW

The District Court had jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1343. We exercise appellate jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1291.

Whether plaintiffs properly objected to the Unions' fair-share fee calculation is a question of standing and is subject to de novo review. In re RFE Indus., Inc., 283 F.3d 159, 163 (3d Cir. 2002). We also review de novo the District Court's grant of summary judgment. Cloverland-Green Spring Dairies, Inc. v. Pa. Milk Mktg. Bd., 298 F.3d 201, 210 (3d Cir. 2002).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Objection Requirement

The Unions contend that plaintiffs failed to carry their burden of objecting to the fair-share fee calculation by not raising a "contemporaneous objection," i.e., by not objecting at the time of fee collection. Addressing this issue as a question of plaintiffs' standing to sue, the District Court rejected the Unions' contention on the ground that plaintiffs' complaint satisfied the objection requirement. We agree.

No Supreme Court case explicitly establishes a contemporaneous-objection requirement. While International Association of Machinists v. Street, 367 U.S. 740 (1961), held that each non-member must individually object to disputed fair-share fees, that requirement merely places the burden on dissenting employees affirmatively to opt out of fees to which they object, rather than allowing them to opt into fees with which they agree. See id. at 771 (holding that because the individual Street plaintiffs "have in the course of [this action] made known to their respective unions their objection to the use of their money for the support of political causes[,] . . . the respective unions were without power to use payments thereafter tendered by them for such political causes"). Since Street, the Court has reiterated that non-members may raise their initial objection in a complaint. Abood, 431 U.S. at 239 ("[T]he requirement in Street that dissent be affirmatively indicated was satisfied by the allegations in the complaint that was filed.”) (citation omitted); Bhd. of Ry. & S.S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exps. & Station Employees v. Allen, 373 U.S. 113, 119 n.6 (1963) (citing Street, 367 U.S. at 771) (employees in Railway Labor Act case “first made known their objection to the [unions’] political expenditures in their complaint filed in this action; however, this was early enough”).

Yet the Unions argue that Hudson imposed a more onerous notice standard and that “post-Hudson cases have implicitly rejected the notion of objection-by-lawsuit.” Even assuming arguendo that the Unions are correct, the contemporaneous-objection principle they espouse would nonetheless be inapplicable in this case because, as we explain more fully infra in Section III.B, “the notice procedures and the fee information given under the plan were inadequate.” Lowary v. Lexington Local Bd. of Educ., 903 F.2d 422, 430 (6th Cir. 1990). Thus the plaintiffs lacked sufficient information to formulate a contemporaneous objection.

B. Independent Auditor Verification

In Hudson, the Supreme Court held that a local union representing 27,500 employees and collecting over $4 million in annual dues must provide non-members with “sufficient information to gauge the propriety of the union’s fee.” 475 U.S. at 306. The Court went on to explain that “[t]he Union need not provide nonmembers with an exhaustive and detailed list of all its expenditures, but adequate disclosure surely would include the major categories of expenses, as well as verification by an independent auditor.” Id. at 307 n.18 (emphasis added). We applied Hudson’s independent auditor requirement in Hohe v. Casey, 956 F.2d 399 (3d Cir. 1992), and held that the First Amendment required a state-level exclusive bargaining representative for approximately 54,000 employees to obtain independent auditor verification. Id. at 415-16. We noted that “the purpose of requiring the verification in the [Hudson] notice is to give the nonmembers some prior assurance that the [fair-share] fee was properly calculated,” and “[w]hen nonmembers do not receive that assurance, their constitutional rights are violated under Hudson.” Id. at 415.

Today we decide whether Hudson's independent auditor requirement applies to SAEA, a much smaller union than the unions involved in Hudson and Hohe. Plaintiffs argue that it does. The Unions contend that Hudson's independent auditor requirement was merely dictum or applies only to large unions, like those in Hudson and Hohe, that can afford an independent auditor. They point out that SAEA would spend more on an audit than it collects through fair-share fees. Moreover, the Unions claim that SAEA's finances are so simplistic that non-members can obtain "sufficient information," Hudson, 475 U.S. at 306, by examining its documents themselves.

No other circuit has clearly resolved this issue.⁵ In

5. A state case from Massachusetts, Wareham Education Association v. Labor Relations Commission, 713 N.E.2d 363 (Mass. 1999), squarely addressed the question before us and held that "there is no exception to Hudson's audit requirement for small local union affiliates." Id. at 368. Another state-court case, Whitley County Teachers Association v. Bauer, 718 N.E.2d 1181 (Ind. Ct. App. 1999), reached the opposite result, holding that Hudson was not violated when a local union did not obtain an independent audit of its financial records. Id. at 1191-92. In Tierney v. City of Toledo, 824 F.2d 1497 (6th Cir. 1987), the Sixth Circuit wrote that Hudson required "an audited, detailed accounting of local union payments to affiliated state and national labor organizations." Id. at 1503. However, the Court did not make this statement in the context of a claim that Hudson's requirements should apply differently to a small local union, as is the case here.

The Unions note that, in the NLRB context, some courts have approved what is known as the "local presumption" — an assumption that the percentage of chargeable to nonchargeable expenses will be the same for the local union as for the parent union. See, e.g., Finerty v. NLRB, 113 F.3d 1288, 1292-93 (D.C. Cir. 1997); see also Thomas v. NLRB, 213 F.3d 651, 659-60 (D.C. Cir. 2000); Price v. Int'l Union, United Auto., Aerospace & Agric. Implement Workers of Am., 927 F.2d 88, 93-94 (2d Cir. 1991) (approving use of local presumption). Courts presented with First Amendment questions in the public employer context have not approved of the local presumption, however. See, e.g., Lowary v. Lexington Local Bd. of Educ., 903 F.2d 422, 431 (6th Cir. 1990); Prescott, 177 F.3d at 1108. Whatever the validity of the local presumption, it is irrelevant to the question presented in this case. The local presumption is merely a method for estimating a local union's ratio of chargeable to nonchargeable expenses. At issue here is whether an auditor must verify Andrews v. Education Association of Cheshire, 829 F.2d 335 (2d Cir. 1987), the Second Circuit concluded that “the procedures mandated by Hudson are to be accorded all nonmembers of agency shops regardless of whether the union believes them to be excessively costly.” Id. at 339. However, the Court limited this broad statement in a footnote, in which it made clear that it was not addressing whether or how Hudson applies to small local unions because the local union there was one of “three interlocking organizations” — the local union, the state union, and the NEA.⁶ Id. at 340 n.2 (“[The district court’s] opinion implies that Hudson might not require an independent auditor if the union involved were small enough. We need not decide the issue here.”) (internal citation omitted).

The Ninth Circuit, in Prescott v. County of El Dorado, 177 F.3d 1102 (9th Cir. 1999), vacated on other grounds, 528 U.S. 1111 (2000), reinstated in relevant part, 204 F.3d 984 (2000), held that, regardless of its accompanying high cost, a state union must conduct a “true audit.” Id. at 1107-08. The Court left unanswered, however, whether the independent auditor requirement applied to a small local union. Id. at 1108. (“We do not decide that each little unit in the [state union] firmament must necessarily be subjected to a separate verified audit of its expenditures”). In a subsequent case, Harik v. Chicago Teachers Association, 298 F.3d 863 (9th Cir. 2002), the Court held that a small local union must obtain “independent verification” of its expenses, but need not obtain a “formal audit.” Id. at 866. The Harik Court did not discuss precisely what “independent verification” entails and how it differs from the “true audit” Prescott required of larger unions.

the total expenses to which that ratio may be applied. See Hohe, 956 F.2d at 410 (in a case in which a union attempted to apply the local presumption, holding disclosure to non-members inadequate because “[t]he notice . . . to nonmembers did not disclose the affiliated locals’ ‘major categories of expenses’ nor was there any assertion that the locals’ categories of expenses mirrored those of [the state union.]”).

6. While Andrews did not provide any basis for us to determine whether the local unions at issue were larger than SAEA, we note that SAEA too is part of “three interlocking organizations” — SAEA, PSEA, and NEA.

We hold that every union collecting fair-share fees from non-members must subject its disclosed financial information to independent auditor verification. The Supreme Court's mandate cannot be bent simply because the cost to the union is great. The Supreme Court implied no intent to make the audit requirement depend on the size of the reporting union. Absent a directive by the Court, we likewise make no exception.

But what level of independent auditor verification does Hudson require? Broadly speaking, auditors can provide three different types of accounting services: compilations, reviews, and audits. A compilation is the "lowest level of assurance" regarding an entity's financial statements. Christian Tregillis, Overview of Services Provided by CPAs, in Basics of Accounting & Finance: What Every Practicing Lawyer Needs to Know 88 (PLI Corp. Law & Practice Course, Handbook Series No. B-1064, 1998). It expresses "neither an opinion nor any level of assurance." Id. When performing a compilation, an accountant need not "verify or corroborate the financial statement information provided by the client." Jane Dillard-Eggers, Understanding Compilations, Reviews, and Audits, at http://www.tscpa.com/public/smallbusinessarticles/understanding_compilations.htm.

A review involves an intermediate level of scrutiny in which the auditor provides "limited assurance" on the entity's financial statements. See id. In so doing, the auditor indicates that he "is not aware of any material modifications needed to be in conformity with [generally accepted accounting principles, also known as GAAP.]" Tregillis, supra, at 88. In order to provide this "limited assurance," the auditor must make some, but not comprehensive, inquiry into client management, accounting practices, internal control structure, and analytical procedures used by the organization. See Dillard-Eggers, supra. The scope of the "inquiry and analytical procedures are the major difference between a review and a compilation." Larry P. Bailey, GAAS Guide: A Comprehensive Restatement of Generally Accepted Auditing Standards 16.31 (1994).

In an audit, which provides “the highest level of assurance on financial statements,” the accountant “provides verification of the financial statements’ claims and assertions” and expresses an opinion on the entity’s financials. Tregillis, supra, at 85 (emphasis added). Among other procedures, the accountant “consider[s] and evaluate[s] . . . the internal control system of the [client] . . . [and] tests . . . the underlying documentation to support account balances.” Dillard-Eggers, supra; Bailey, supra, at 16.51. Annual audits are required for all publicly traded companies. Tregillis, supra, at 85.

As between a review and an audit, “[a] review may bring to the accountant’s attention significant matters affecting the financial statements, but it does not provide assurance that the accountant will become aware of all significant matters that would be disclosed in an audit.” 1 John R. Clay et al., Guide to Compilation and Review Engagements § 101.5 (24th ed. 2002). This is because “a review does not contemplate obtaining an understanding of the internal control structure or assessing control risk; tests of accounting records and of responses to inquiries by obtaining corroborating evidential matter through inspection, observation or confirmation; and certain other procedures ordinarily performed during an audit.” Id.

We hold that local unions, regardless of their size, are required to obtain formal audits of their financial statements. Compilations and reviews do not provide an adequate basis for a non-member to decide whether to object to a fair-share fee. See Prescott, 177 F.3d at 1107 (“[A]n audit, as opposed to a review, offers at least some verification of the amounts disclosed in the financial statement. . . . We do not see how a mere review of the union’s records can offer the ‘verification’ that the Supreme Court and we have spoken of.”). Indeed, “verification” — the word used by the Supreme Court in Hudson, 475 U.S. at 307 n.18, and by at least one accounting authority in describing an audit, see Tregillis, supra, at 85 — means authenticating or confirming the truth or accuracy of a statement. Webster’s Third New Int’l Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged 2543 (1971). Put another way, an audit “make[s] assurance double sure.” William Shakespeare, Macbeth act 4, sc. 1, line 96 (W.J. Craig, ed., Oxford 1914). A review — testing merely to be aware of the need for material modifications to financial disclosures — does not.⁷

We take no position on the precise procedures an accountant must follow when auditing a local union.⁸ Like the Second Circuit in Andrews, 829 F.2d at 340, and the Sixth Circuit in Gwirtz v. Ohio Education Association, 887 F.2d 678, 680 (6th Cir. 1989), we decline to hold either that an accountant's procedures must constitute the "least restrictive process imaginable," Andrews, 829 F.2d at 340, or that local unions must obtain the "'highest' possible level of audit service," Gwirtz, 887 F.2d at 680. See generally Prescott, 177 F.3d at 1107 (noting that audits "may vary in procedures and sampling rates"). We do note, however, that Hudson does not require absolute precision. See Hudson, 475 U.S. at 307 n.18 ("We continue to recognize that there are practical reasons why '[a]bsolute precision' in the calculation of the charge to nonmembers

7. We recognize that accountants review rather than audit public corporations' interim financial statements, D. Edward Martin, Attorney's Handbook of Accounting, Auditing and Financial Reporting § 13.03[1] (4th ed. 2002), and that investors rely on these unaudited interim financial statements when making investment decisions. Despite this industry practice, we believe that, until the Supreme Court tells otherwise, Hudson forecloses the argument that a review is acceptable in this context.

8. However, we read literally Hudson's requirement of auditor independence and therefore require that the accountant performing the audit be truly independent of the local union, i.e., not an accountant employed in-house by the union. See Ferriso v. NLRB, 125 F.3d 865, 871-73 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (holding that Hudson requires an auditor to have "independence and qualifications [that] conform to prevailing norms for audits of comparable entities."). But see Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. NLRB, 133 F.3d 1012, 1017 (7th Cir. 1998) (Posner, J.) (explicitly declining to follow Ferriso because "'[i]ndependence' is a slippery term" and cases requiring absolute independence failed to "consider alternatives" and are "in tension with cases . . . that hold that dissenters are not entitled to the highest level of audit services that the market offers").

cannot be ‘expected or required.’ ”) (quoting Allen, 373 U.S. at 122) (alteration in original).⁹

We recognize that our decision might place high costs on some local unions. However, non-members’ First Amendment freedoms may not be eroded simply because they are costly to enforce. Further, local unions are not without options. For example, unions without the financial wherewithal to afford the Hudson-mandated audit might choose to enter into combinations with other small unions to achieve necessary economies of scale. In the alternative, state or national unions might choose to subsidize the cost of local unions’ audits.

C. Litigation Expenditures

Plaintiffs’ fair-share fees include charges for collective-bargaining-related litigation conducted by PSEA or its affiliates but unrelated specifically to the SAEA unit. Such expenses are known as extra-unit litigation expenses. Plaintiffs contend that the extra-unit litigation expenses at issue are nonchargeable. See Ellis v. Bhd. of Ry., Airline & S.S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exps., & Station Employees, 466 U.S. 435, 453 (1984) (holding certain litigation expenses not incurred on behalf of non-members’ bargaining unit unchargeable to those non-members). The Unions argue that, because the litigation expenses at issue are “pooled” across PSEA affiliates, these expenses are chargeable to non-union members. See Lehnert v. Ferris Faculty Ass’n, 500 U.S. 507, 524 (1991) (holding that a union may charge non-members for their pro rata share of certain expenses incurred pursuant to a cost-sharing agreement with affiliate unions). This case thus requires us to address an expense-chargeability issue that lies in the intersection of the Ellis and Lehnert holdings: whether a union may charge non-members for their pro rata share of expenses that relate to litigation and that were incurred on behalf of an affiliate union pursuant to a cost-sharing agreement.

9. In this vein, we follow other circuits that have held that the independent audit requirement does not require the auditor to verify the local union’s classification of expenses as chargeable or nonchargeable. See, e.g., Dashiell v. Montgomery County, Md., 925 F.2d 750, 755-56 (4th Cir. 1991); Gwartz, 887 F.2d at 682 n.3; Ping v. Nat’l Educ. Ass’n, 870 F.2d 1369, 1374 (7th Cir. 1989); Andrews, 829 F.2d at 340. We agree with these circuits that chargeability is a legal question. Dashiell, 925 F.2d at 755-56; Gwartz, 887 F.2d at 682 n.3; Ping, 870 F.2d at 1374; Andrews, 829 F.2d at 340. To require an accountant to verify that a union has correctly classified expenditures is “tantamount to requiring the auditor to give a second legal opinion,” Dashiell, 925 F.2d at 756, which is clearly beyond the scope of an auditor’s duties.

As noted, Ellis holds that a union may not charge non-union members for certain extra-unit litigation expenses.¹⁰ Ellis, 466 U.S. at 453 (while expenses of collective-bargaining-related litigation arising from the non-members' bargaining unit are "clearly chargeable" to that employee, "[t]he expenses of litigation not having such a connection with the [non-members'] bargaining unit are not to be charged to objecting employees").¹¹ But Ellis did not involve expenses incurred by an affiliate bargaining unit pursuant to an expense-pooling arrangement with that affiliate. Here, PSEA and its affiliates have agreed to pool their litigation expenses for the unions' mutual benefit. This case therefore presents a significantly different question than Ellis. Even if

10. Examples of the challenged litigation in Ellis included "the union's challenge to the legality of the airline industry's Mutual Aid Pact, under which a struck carrier receives substantial financial assistance from non-struck carriers; the protection of employees' rights during bankruptcy proceedings involving an employer; the doctrine of fair representation; and the defense of suits alleging violation of the non-discrimination requirements of Title VII." Ellis v. Bhd. of Ry., Airline & S.S. Clerks, Freight Handlers, Exps., & Station Employees, 685 F.2d 1065, 1073 (9th Cir. 1982), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 466 U.S. 435 (1984).

11. While Ellis interpreted the Railway Labor Act ("RLA") rather than the First Amendment, subsequent cases have suggested that RLA cases such as Ellis "necessarily provide some guidance regarding what the First Amendment will countenance in the realm of union support of political activities through mandatory assessments." Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 516; see also Romero v. Colegio De Abogados De P.R., 204 F.3d 291, 298 (1st Cir. 2000) ("Although the decision [in Ellis] turned on a statutory interpretation of the Railway Labor Act, the Court was clear that its interpretation was required to avoid constitutional difficulty. Later cases have interpreted Ellis as setting forth constitutional rules . . .") (internal citations omitted).

a local union party to such an arrangement does not litigate in any given year, it still derives a tangible benefit from participating in an expense-pooling agreement: the availability of on-call resources greater than those it could muster individually. Cf. Finerty v. NLRB, 113 F.3d 1288, 1292 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (“It is indisputable that, by pooling its resources on a union-wide basis, a union, which is the bargaining representative of all its members, provides some benefit to members of the various local unions.”) (emphasis in original). Moreover, it is unclear whether the Ellis Court would have reached the same result if the extra-unit litigation at issue were more related to the collective bargaining activities of the Ellis plaintiffs’ bargaining unit. In other words, it is unclear whether the Court intended to state a per se rule against the chargeability of extra-unit litigation expenses.

In Lehnert, the Supreme Court held that a union may charge non-union members for their pro rata share of expenses incurred on behalf of affiliate bargaining units when there is “some indication that the payment is for services that may ultimately inure to the benefit of the members of the local union by virtue of their membership in the parent organization.” Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 524.¹² A majority of the Court in Lehnert reached this conclusion by applying a three-part test to assess whether a particular union affiliate’s expense is chargeable to non-members of the union. “[C]hargeable activities must (1) be ‘germane’ to collective-bargaining activity; (2) be justified by the government’s vital policy interest in labor peace and avoiding ‘free riders’; and (3) not significantly add to the burdening of free speech that is inherent in the allowance of an agency or union shop.” Id. at 519.¹³ However, when

12. The dissent also endorsed this result, even though it would have reached that conclusion through a different analytical path. See Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 561-62 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part).

13. While this test was in a plurality opinion of Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices Blackmun, White and Stevens, see Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 519, a fifth justice, Justice Marshall, joined the portion of the plurality opinion containing the test, see id. at 534 (Marshall, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

the Lehnert Court attempted to apply this test to a question similar to the one before us — whether expenses for reporting on extra-unit litigation, where litigation expenses are incurred pursuant to a cost-pooling agreement with an affiliate union, are chargeable to non-members of the local bargaining unit — no five justices agreed.

Justice Blackmun, joined by Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justices White and Stevens, noted that dissenting employees may not be charged for the costs of union literature reporting on extra-unit litigation because they cannot be charged for such litigation itself under Ellis. Id. at 528. He acknowledged that litigation conducted by one bargaining unit could establish precedents useful to another bargaining unit. But he concluded that this potential benefit was too attenuated and that “extraunit litigation [is] more akin to lobbying [which is not chargeable] in both kind and effect.” *Id.*¹⁴ Were Justice Blackmun able to garner five justices’ votes for the proposition that extra-unit litigation is not chargeable to non-union members, Lehnert would control here. However, as we discuss, he wrote only for a plurality of four.

Justice Scalia, joined by Justices O’Connor and Souter, “agree[d] with the Court’s disposition of many of the challenged expenditures,” but disagreed with the majority’s three-part test for evaluating the chargeability of expenditures. Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 550 (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part). Rather, Justice Scalia would permit expenses to be charged to non-members when those expenses are incurred as part of “the union’s statutory duties as exclusive bargaining agent.” Id. However, he did not apply his preferred test to the question whether dissenting employees could be charged for the expenses of union reporting on extra-unit litigation (or for the expenses of extra-unit litigation itself).

14. Justice Marshall, who otherwise concurred in Justice Blackmun’s opinion, emphasized that Lehnert concerned the chargeability of a union’s reporting on extra-unit litigation. Chargeability of reporting is different from chargeability of the litigation itself. This disagreement about the scope of the issues before the Court led Justice Marshall to dissent on this issue. He would have held reporting on extraunit litigation expenses chargeable, “particularly since the publication costs at issue are de minimis” and involved only “a few pennies.” Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 534, 546. (Marshall, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Justice Kennedy, who endorsed Justice Scalia's rather than Justice Blackmun's chargeability test, wrote separately to argue that extra-unit litigation expenditures should be allowed if "undertaken in the course of the union's duties as exclusive bargaining representative." Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 563 (Kennedy, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part). He criticized Justice Blackmun's reliance on Ellis to resolve the question whether costs of reporting on extra-unit litigation are chargeable, pointing out that Ellis did not address a litigation-cost-sharing arrangement. Id. at 564.

Despite the fact that no five justices explicitly agreed on the chargeability of expenses arising from extra-unit litigation, plaintiffs insist that Lehnert controls our disposition of the litigation-expenditures issue. They contend that because Justice Scalia was clear when he disagreed with the Court's rulings on other expenditures, he must have agreed with Justice Blackmun's position that extra-unit litigation expenditures are not chargeable. We disagree with the plaintiffs' interpretation of Justice Scalia's opinion, for his silence is inconclusive.¹⁵ We are therefore

15. We note that application of Justice Scalia's chargeability standard does not necessarily result in the prohibition against pooled extra-unit litigation expenses that Justice Blackmun espoused. A union's incurring extra-unit litigation expenses might, under some circumstances, be "essential to [the union's] discharge of its duties as bargaining agent." Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 560 (quoting Ellis, 466 U.S. at 448-49) (Scalia, J., concurring in the judgment in part and dissenting in part). Moreover, Justice Scalia's willingness to consider as a chargeable expense an annual fee assessed by a national union to a local bargaining unit to ensure the availability of on-demand services, id. at 561-62, suggests that he might also be willing to consider as chargeable a local bargaining unit's pro rata share of pooled litigation expenses. That pro rata assessment is essentially an annual fee to ensure the availability of litigation resources to the local unit — a form of insurance. We therefore disagree with the Tenth Circuit's conclusion in Pilots Against Illegal Dues v. Air Line Pilots Association, 938 F.2d 1123, 1130 n.4 (10th Cir. 1991), that a majority of the Lehnert Court would not allow extra-unit litigation expenses incurred pursuant to a pooling agreement to be charged to non-union members.

left without definitive Supreme Court guidance. See Planned Parenthood of S.E. Pa. v. Casey, 947 F.2d 682, 693 (3d Cir. 1991), aff'd in part and rev'd in part, 505 U.S. 833 (1992) (stating that a putative majority standard must “necessarily produce results with which a majority of the Court from that case would agree”).

The Sixth Circuit, the Court of Appeals from which Lehnert was appealed to the Supreme Court, addressed the issue before us in Reese v. City of Columbus, 71 F.3d 619 (6th Cir. 1995). The Court agreed with Justice Marshall that the Lehnert plurality’s statement on extra-unit litigation expenses was “no more than dicta” because at issue was the cost of reporting on extra-unit litigation. Id. at 623-24. It then proceeded to find that Lehnert not only allowed, but required, it to approve the charges “because a majority [in Lehnert] approved of charges for pooled expenses like those in this case.” Id. at 624. While Reese overstates Lehnert’s holding, as the Lehnert majority never held extra-unit litigation expenses incurred pursuant to a pooling agreement to be chargeable, we nonetheless agree with the Sixth Circuit’s conclusion.

Moreover, in International Association of Machinists & Aerospace Workers v. NLRB, 133 F.3d 1012 (7th Cir. 1998), the Seventh Circuit enforced an NLRB decision in which the NLRB rejected as a matter of law the proposition that extra-unit litigation expenses should be treated differently from other extra-unit expenses and instead “appl[ie]d the same standard for determining the chargeability of litigation expenses as we are required . . . to apply to all other expenses.” Cal. Saw & Knife Works, 320 N.L.R.B. 224, 239 (1995). The Seventh Circuit agreed that litigation expenditures are “analytically identical” to other expenditures related to collective bargaining. International Ass’n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers, 133 F.3d at 1016.

We too uphold the chargeability of the extra-unit litigation expenses at issue by applying the Lehnert majority’s three-part chargeability test: “chargeable activities must (1) be ‘germane’ to collective-bargaining activity; (2) be justified by the government’s vital policy interest in labor peace and avoiding ‘free riders’; and (3) not significantly add to the burdening of free speech that is inherent in the allowance of an agency or union shop.” Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 519. First, that the litigation expenses at issue were incurred pursuant to an expense-pooling arrangement makes the pro rata share of those expenses charged to SAEA members and non-members akin to insurance. See id. at 523 (noting that because “[t]he essence of the affiliation relationship is the notion that the parent will bring to bear its often considerable economic, political, and informational resources when the local is in need of them,” the portion of a local’s fair-share fee that “contributes to the pool of resources potentially available to the local is assessed for the bargaining unit’s protection, even if it is not actually expended on that unit in any particular membership year”). The “premium” that SAEA members and non-members pay, in the form of a pro rata share of litigation expenses, ensures that the local bargaining unit will have sufficient resources at its disposal should it need, in the future, to engage in collective bargaining-related litigation (which would be chargeable to non-union members). Because the extra-unit litigation expenditures at issue ensure the availability of resources for collective-bargaining-related litigation, those expenditures are germane to collective-bargaining activity.

Applying the second prong of the Lehnert test, we note that the free-rider concerns applicable to other pooled-expense arrangements apply with equal force to extra-unit litigation expenditures.

Third, extra-unit litigation expenses present “little additional infringement of First Amendment rights beyond that already accepted,” Ellis, 466 U.S. at 456, where, as here, the pooled litigation resources are expended on collective-bargaining-related activities and “may ultimately inure to the benefit of the members of the local union,” Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 524. That non-litigation, collective-bargaining-related expenses for, inter alia, pooled negotiating advice and informational assistance in Lehnert are chargeable to objecting employees informs our conclusion.

Unlike the Justice Blackmun camp in Lehnert, we discern no compelling reason to treat litigation expenses incurred pursuant to a pooling agreement differently from other pooled expenses. Thus we conclude that they are chargeable to SAEA's non-members.

D. Multi-occupational representation

In addition to providing services to education professionals, PSEA's affiliated local associations also provide collective-bargaining-related services to healthcare professionals. When PSEA calculates the expenses chargeable to fair-share payers, it does not allocate chargeable costs by profession. Rather, it includes as part of fair-share fees the expenses incurred on behalf of all represented employees, i.e., educators and healthcare professionals. Plaintiffs argue that the First Amendment bars PSEA from passing onto them costs incurred on behalf of healthcare professionals because PSEA has not shown that those costs “may ultimately inure to [their education unit’s] benefit . . . by virtue of [its] membership in [PSEA].” Lehnert, 500 U.S. at 524.

The District Court granted summary judgment in favor of the Unions, holding that the plaintiffs failed to allege facts suggesting that any of the three Lehnert requirements were not satisfied (to repeat, that the expenditures are not “‘germane’ to collective-bargaining activity,” not “justified by the government’s vital policy interest in labor peace and avoiding ‘free riders,’” or that they “significantly add to the burdening of free speech that is inherent in the allowance of an agency or union shop”). In so doing, the District Court improperly placed the burden of proof on the plaintiffs when it belonged on the Unions. As Lehnert points out, “[t]he union [bore] the burden of proving the proportion of chargeable expenses to total expenses.” Id.

Because plaintiffs do not challenge any particular expenditures, we evaluate, as a matter of law, whether PSEA may pool costs across occupational groups. We answer this question affirmatively. As discussed above, Lehnert held that “a local bargaining representative may charge objecting employees for their pro rata share of the costs associated with otherwise chargeable activities of its state and national affiliates, even if those activities were not performed for the direct benefit of the objecting employees’ bargaining unit,” so long as there is “some indication that the payment is for services that may ultimately inure to the benefit of the members of the local union by virtue of their membership in the parent organization.” Id.

In our case, the pooling arrangement confers potential benefits on the plaintiffs. First, the arrangement generates economies of scale that redound to their benefit. Second, by spreading the costs of otherwise-chargeable expenses over a pool of employees whose chargeable-expense levels are not perfectly correlated with their own (i.e., healthcare professionals as well as education professionals), education professionals reduce their risk of being assessed unusually high chargeable expenses in any given year. Moreover, this pooling arrangement does not necessarily increase the dollar amount of chargeable expenses assessed to plaintiffs for any particular year. Just as education professionals are assessed for healthcare professionals’ chargeable expenses, so too healthcare professionals are assessed for education professionals’ chargeable expenses. As PSEA correctly points out, this arrangement may result in lower fair-share fees than would have been assessed in the absence of such an arrangement.

We also note that the Lehnert Court did not limit its holding only to bargaining units within the same industry, or within related industries. Instead, it stated a broad principle: “that part of a local’s affiliation fee which contributes to the pool of resources potentially available to the local is assessed for the bargaining unit’s protection, even if it is not actually expended on that unit in any particular membership year.” Id. at 523. Though this reasoning was not that employed by the District Court, it nonetheless supports its ultimate grant of summary judgment to the Unions.¹⁶

IV. CONCLUSION

We reverse the District Court’s grant of summary
